

Faces Of Anxiety: Poems

POETRY

OUR BODIES

Our bodies, still young under the engraved anxiety of our faces, and innocently

more expressive than faces:
nipples, navel, and pubic hair make anyway a

sort of face: or taking the rounded shadows at
breast, buttock, balls,

the plump of my belly, the hollow of your
groin, as a constellation,

how it leans from earth to dawn in a gesture of
play and

wise compassion—
nothing like this
comes to pass
in eyes or wistful
mouths.

I have

a line or groove I love
runs down
my body from breastbone to waist. It speaks of eagerness, of
distance.
