

Getting Free: A Handbook For Women In Abusive Relationships

Self-Help

"Ginny NiCarthy has come up with a flexible, practical handbook for all of us to use." —A Safe Place Newsletter

"The advice is sound, sustaining, and much needed." —Booklist

"Highly recommended." —Library Journal

Since its first publication, Getting Free has provided a lifeline for thousands of women seeking to free themselves from abusive relationships. With uncomplicated yet motivational language, this book contains all the tools and advice you need to help yourself recognize, respond to, and overcome domestic violence. Practical information is partnered with special exercises designed to identify patterns of behavior—and to ultimately help you make decisions about your life and your future.

Each chapter provides solid solutions for issues related to a variety of topics, including emotional abuse, child abuse, financial stability, legal issues, love and fear, same-sex abuse, teen abuse, guilt, and safety—from planning a safe escape to staying safe long after you leave. This updated fourth edition features:

- ◆ advice when faced with religious challenges
- ◆ resources for batterers
- ◆ tips on child safety and fostering their resilience
- ◆ information and guidance for immigrant women
- ◆ suggestions for community involvement
- ◆ online resources
- ◆ illustrations detailing power-and-control tactics

Ginny NiCarthy has written many books dealing with the issue of violence against women. Her work to end abuse began in 1972 as the founder and director of Rape Relief in Seattle. She later founded and directed the Abused Women's Network. She is a board member of Claya, which serves South Asian women, and of the King County Coalition Against Domestic Violence. She sees her work with individual battered women as closely intertwined with other community, national, and international campaigns to stop abuse of power and to promote peace and justice.
